BUILDING YOUNG CHILDREN'S SELF ESTEEM

Patty Wipfler, Program Director and Founder, Hand in Hand Parenting

Building self-esteem at a young age is important to the social development of all children and has long-reaching effects into their future. At an early age, children are aware of how they are valued and whether they are accepted by their family, friends and peers. Parents, teachers and other adults play an important role in helping children learn self-worth and a sense of belonging which creates a socially safe atmosphere for children to grow.
